Dear Prime Minister Pintassilgo:

Thank you for your very thoughtful note about your visit to Dartmouth College and I apologize for the long delay in sending this letter. I usually wait for a short while after such a visit in order to gather my own impressions about the impact that such a visit has had. I followed the same course for your visit but other events rushed in to delay my own note to you to thank you for the visit.

You touched a great many people and all during the spring term I kept coming in contact with students and faculty who on their own and in very different contexts commented upon your visit to the College. It is very gratifying to have helped bring about an event which affected so many different people in so many different ways. Your willingness to meet in so many different situations in such an intense schedule made all of the effort exciting, enjoyable and worthwhile. Your enthusiasm and responsiveness created a depth and richness to the visit which is rare. All of Dartmouth College is in your debt and we appreciate your willingness to spend time on our campus.

If you are ever in the United States again and would like a weekend of some time in the country, please do not hesitate to call. We would welcome you as our guest and would promise even not to work you as hard as we did this time. Again, my thanks for your kind letter and for the generosity of sharing your spirit, caring and insight with us.

Sincerely,

Gregory S. Prince, Jr.
